An increase in the interest rate shifts the investment curve to the left from being a horizontal or near horizontal line to a downward-sloping line. The horizontal line represents the investment demand schedule's being so flat that investment is independent of the interest rate. The downward-sloping line represents the investment demand curve being steeper than the horizontal line. The only way that the investment demand curve can be so flat that investment is independent of the interest rate is if the interest rate is so low that the marginal efficiency schedule is nearly horizontal.

1. Investment is not independent of the interest rate because the marginal efficiency schedule is downward-sloping. Investment is independent of the interest rate only when the marginal efficiency schedule is nearly horizontal.
