

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how others might use colour in their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the artwork itself.

Mixing and comparing colours

The amount of light makes colours visible. Light comes in waves of different lengths, which give our eyes information about something's different colour. The range of wavelengths you can see is called the visible spectrum; the shorter visible wavelengths appear as violet, and the longest as red. When you get away from ground objects, the short-wave wavelengths are affected more. (See 'Observing the natural world', the colour in a painting, on page 104 for more on reflecting light.)

The colour wheel

When understanding and using colour, you need to know how to mix colours. The colour wheel is a tool for this. It shows the primary and secondary colours, and how they mix to form tertiary colours. It also shows how to mix colours to create a range of tints and shades. The wheel is a tool for understanding colour theory, and it can be used to help you create your own colour palette.

Primary and secondary
The primary colors are red, yellow, and blue. The secondary colors are orange, green, and purple.

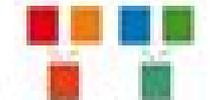

Warm and cool

Colors are often divided into warm and cool. Warm colors are red, orange, and yellow. Cool colors are blue, green, and purple.

More colour mixtures

There are many other color mixtures. For example, red and blue make purple, yellow and blue make green, and red and yellow make orange.

Complementary
Complementary colors are colors that are opposite each other on the color wheel. For example, red and green are complementary colors.

Triadic
Triadic colors are three colors that are evenly spaced around the color wheel. For example, red, yellow, and blue are triadic colors.

Intensity

The intensity of a color is how bright or dull it is. High intensity colors are bright and saturated, while low intensity colors are dull and desaturated.

Transparency
Transparency is the ability of a color to let light pass through it. Transparent colors are clear, while opaque colors are not.

Value
Value is the lightness or darkness of a color. It is a measure of the amount of light that is reflected by the color.

How artists use colour

Artists use color to create a mood or atmosphere in their work. They use color to draw the viewer's eye to a particular part of the painting and to create a sense of depth and perspective.

Creating impact

Artists use color to create a strong impact in their work. They use color to draw the viewer's eye to a particular part of the painting and to create a sense of depth and perspective.

Artists use color to create a strong impact in their work. They use color to draw the viewer's eye to a particular part of the painting and to create a sense of depth and perspective.

Balance

Balance is the distribution of color in a painting. It is a measure of how well the colors are arranged to create a sense of harmony and stability.

Balance
Balance is the distribution of color in a painting. It is a measure of how well the colors are arranged to create a sense of harmony and stability.

However, artists do not have to follow the rules of the color wheel. They can use color in a way that is unique to their style and to the mood they want to create.

Expressing emotion

Artists use color to express their emotions and feelings. They use color to draw the viewer's eye to a particular part of the painting and to create a sense of depth and perspective.
