Normative Decision Theory	Descriptive Decision Theory
Normative Decision Theory: How should we make a decision when there are multiple options available to us? Normative Decision Theory	Descriptive Decision Theory: How do we actually make a decision when there are multiple options available to us? Descriptive Decision Theory

Normative decision theory is concerned with how the rationality ideal prescribes process and outcomes by providing a well-ordered and strategically grounded framework.

How do these two (Normative) models differ?

1. Normative approaches describe good choices and better processes prescriptively
  - attempting prescriptively a rational process & results
2. Descriptive approaches describe psychological processes in normative process and outcomes that don't fit the ideal.
3. Normative approaches analyze outcomes in well-ordered or well-structured rational choices. Descriptive approaches, on the other hand, describe the actual choices people make, which are often irrational.
4. Normative approaches describe choices in the best sense and often don't provide a model of choice (descriptive) process.

Comparing normative and descriptive decision-making with/without formal normative approaches:

Normative: "The model of the rational process, made formalized."

Descriptive: "Psychological processes, as applied to formalized process."

Normative (Prescriptive) Process

- ➔ Normative: "The best we should do in order to achieve well-being based on a theory of well-being, which is often a theory of utility or money, or goods that are not self-interest. How, you think, the rational process prescribes the use of resources and the other things that are good?"

1. The focus is on normative processes that are well-ordered based on well-ordered values.
2. The focus is on normative that is, prescribed or described well-ordered well-being.
