

3 Towards a conceptual framework

In order to discuss language teaching coherently we need a conceptual framework, a TI in terms of the last chapter, as a map to guide our exploration. Such a map, at this stage of the enquiry, must be regarded as tentative and open to revision as we proceed.

Some schemes and models

To begin with, let us consider a few of the attempts that have already been made elsewhere with a similar purpose in mind. There has been a growing awareness over the last three or four decades of the enormous complexity of language teaching, leading to the conviction that if language teaching is to be a truly professional enterprise it must deal with the various aspects involved in a scholarly and scientific manner and establish a sound theoretical framework. From around 1940 to 1960 it looked as if a well-reasoned application of linguistics and psychology could provide the best basis for solving the problems of language teaching. But radical changes in both disciplines which took place between 1960 and 1970 dampened these hopes. The interaction between teaching languages as a practical activity and the theoretical developments in language sciences was recognized as less simple and straightforward than it had appeared in the earlier period. A number of scholars came to the conclusion that applied linguistics as a mediating discipline between theoretical developments in the language sciences and the practice of language teaching could perhaps smooth the way for a more effective participation of the language sciences in language teaching. A few influential books of the period 1964 to the mid-seventies expressed this viewpoint, for example, Halliday, McIntosh, and Stevens (1964), Mackey (1965), Corder (1973), and the Edinburgh Course in Applied Linguistics (Allen and Corder 1973–1977). At the same time this group of scholars – in particular Corder – warned that the role of
