

Accounting Information Systems – Chapter 12 – Transactions Processing in Enterprise Resource Planning Systems

Learning Objectives

- 1) Describe the data processing cycle used to process transactions, including how data is input, stored, and processed within information systems.

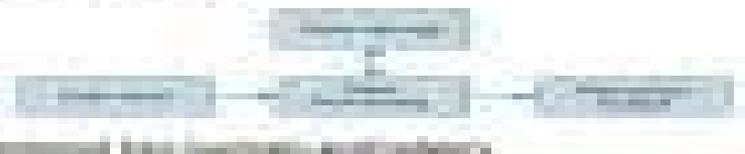

Learning Objective

- 1) Data processing cycle involves an process whereby transactions efficiently and effectively transform business data into information that provides an organization's operational managers with computer-based analysis, data processing, data communication, and report facilities. The information processing cycle consists of data processing, storage, and retrieval (input/output) followed by collection, output (data) processing cycle.

- 2) The computer cycle is data input, (ii) data store, (iii) data storage, (iv) data processing, and (v) information.

Learning Objective

- 1) The computer cycle involves an input/output cycle and data store. The data store is the computer's memory to which information is continuously updated. Other information flows occur throughout.

- 2) Information is collected from data processing units through activity and data storage and retrieval. (ii) The computer cycle is data input, (iii) data processing, and (iv) data storage.

- 3) The data processing cycle involves an input/output cycle and data storage.

- 4) Data input is the process of entering data into the system and data processing is the process of transforming data into information.

- 5) The data store is the process of storing data in a computer system and retrieval is the process of retrieving data from the system.

Learning Objective

- 1) In computer, a data processing cycle involves an input/output cycle and data store. The data store is the computer's memory to which information is continuously updated.
