

An Investment Analysis Case Study: Nike

This case is a group project that is due on March 28 just before class begins at 10:30.

Format: Each group will turn in one report (sounds obvious, but might as well make it explicit). Each report should have a cover page that contains the following – the names of the group members in alphabetical order and the following summary information on the analysis:

Decision on Expansion: Accept or Reject

Return on capital: % value

NPV: $ value

IRR: % value

And please don't title it: "Just do it".

With its dominance of the athletic shoe and sporting apparel businesses, Nike generated $2.81 billion in operating income on revenues of $20.9 billion in the fiscal year that ended in May 2011. While its stock price has rebounded in the last three years (see Exhibit 1), its sales and earnings are being affected by increased competition from both established firms (like Reebok and Adidas) and upstarts (such as Under Armour). Exhibit 2 summarizes Nike's income statement for the last 4 years, and Exhibit 3 summarizes its balance sheet for the last 2 years.

Nike, which currently views itself as operating in the sporting wear (shoes and clothes) segment, is considering an expansion into the fashion apparel business, producing high-priced casual clothing for teenagers and young adults. You have been asked to collect the data to make the assessment and have come back with the following information:

1. You estimate that it will cost Nike $ 2.5 billion to establish a presence in this business. Of this amount, $ 1 billion will have to be spent right now acquiring land, equipment and other assets needed for the business. There will be an additional $ 1 billion investment a year from now, and final investment of $ 0.5 billion at the end of 2 years. The business will be operational at the start of the third year.
2. Of the initial investment of $ 2.5 billion, $1.5 billion is fully depreciable over 10 years starting in the third year, and will be depreciated using double-declining

China: The Remarkable Impact of Foreign Direct Investment Michael J. Enright, 2016-09-12 The importance of foreign investment to China goes well beyond the USD 1.6 trillion in investment received since its opening. The unique analysis in this book shows that the investments, operations, and supply chains of foreign enterprises have accounted for roughly one-third of China's GDP in recent years and that foreign enterprises have made numerous additional contributions to China through technological, managerial, business practice, supply chain, and other spillovers. This book shows how China's leaders managed this process and provides lessons for policy makers interested in building their own economies and tools for companies to demonstrate their contribution to host countries. New Horizons for Foreign Direct Investment

Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, Global Forum on International Investment, 2002 The global economic slowdown and the significant decline in foreign direct investment (FDI) have made it even more imperative to attract international investment in order to achieve sustainable development and poverty reduction. The need to maximise the benefits of FDI compels host and home governments to move beyond the traditional policy of liberalising FDI. A broader set of policies for an enabling environment for investment must be embraced: competition, taxation, financial markets, trade, corporate governance, public administration, respect for workers and environmental rights, and other public policy goals. Developing policy frameworks to ensure that multinational enterprises contribute to development goals and capacity building also remain a priority issue on the international agenda. The OECD Global Forum on International Investment at its inaugural meeting in Mexico City in November 2001 provided a unique platform for participants originating from OECD and non-OECD economies representing academia, business, and labour and civil society to address the challenges posed by FDI. These selected conference papers add to the existing literature on FDI. They highlight the principal conclusions, include analyses of recent FDI trends and prospects and discuss ways of maximising the benefits of FDI for development The papers also examine lessons learned in OECD and non OECD economies governments responsibilities in FDI policies corporate responsibility initiatives and the role of multilateral organisations in capacity building for FDI in host countries
