The case study is about a company that is struggling to bring its employees on board with a new initiative. The company is a large, multi-national organization with a long history of success. The new initiative is a significant change in the way the company operates, and it is essential for the company's future success. The company's management has been successful in the past, but they are now facing a new challenge. The company's employees are not fully committed to the new initiative, and they are not working as hard as they should be. The company's management is looking for ways to improve the situation and get the employees on board with the new initiative.

The company's management has identified several key areas of concern. First, the employees do not understand the new initiative and its benefits. Second, the employees do not see the value of the new initiative. Third, the employees do not feel that they have a say in the new initiative. Fourth, the employees do not feel that they are being supported by their management. The company's management has developed a plan to address these concerns. The plan includes several key actions: 1) Educate the employees about the new initiative and its benefits. 2) Involve the employees in the development of the new initiative. 3) Provide the employees with the resources they need to succeed. 4) Recognize and reward the employees for their contributions. The company's management believes that these actions will help to get the employees on board with the new initiative and improve the company's performance.
