

General APA Guidelines on Writing the Results Section

- ❑ Your main priority in the Results section is to report on the tests of your hypothesis and tell your reader whether or not you obtained evidence in support of your research hypotheses, or failed to do so
- ❑ Tie your writing closely to the hypotheses. Restate the hypothesis under discussion near the beginning of the paragraph and identify the type of test used to assess it. Discuss all the hypotheses in the order in which you presented them
- ❑ If there is a great deal of material, for example multiple dependent variables for which you want to report means, use a table instead of text. Text is for the statistic used to test the hypothesis, the df, the p level, power, effect size, etc or for a report of means if there are only a few variables
- ❑ Don't report raw scores even in a table, although you may refer the reader to where they can find it if they are interested and there are no human subjects issues involved in making it available
