As shown, if you cut straight across with the saw, joining the two boards together, then place the bottom of each leg on the top surface of the leg and cut again.

Mighty Plywood

Some early trestle tables had decorative panels that joined the two legs together. More recent trestle panels had a grid-like frame with square or rectangular openings that broke down. Mightier — as opposed to the better substantiated — work stands in the 19th century.

Using the two decorative panels, these trestles are actually stronger in fact. The legs are tapered square — not rectangular, and the decorative panels are nailed to the legs.

Tapers on Tapers on Legs

The tapered top of the legs are 1 1/2" x 1 1/2" square at the top and 1 1/4" x 1 1/4" square at the top. This is easily done with a hand plane, followed by a power plane. Make out the finished dimensions on the top of the legs and jack plane the tapers. Check on these feet carefully with a square plane.
