This study aims to estimate the technical efficiency and identify sources of technical inefficiency in sorghum production by smallholder farmers in Konso district, southern Ethiopia using data collected from a sample of 124 households. Individual levels of technical efficiency scores were estimated using the Cobb-Douglas functional form, which was specified to estimate the stochastic production frontier. The estimated stochastic production frontier model indicated that input variables such as land, Urea, DAP, labour, oxen and chemicals found to be important factors in increasing the level of sorghum output in the study area. The mean technical efficiency of the sample households was about 69%, which shows existence of a possibility to increase the level of sorghum output by about 31% by efficient use of the existing resources. The estimated stochastic production frontier model together with the inefficiency parameters showed that, age, education, family size, off-farm occupation, extension service, livestock holding, plots distance and soil fertility were found to be significant in determining the level of technical inefficiency of sorghum production in the study area. Negative coefficients of education, family size, off-farm occupation, extension service and soil fertility indicates that improvement in these factors results in a significant decrease in the level of technical inefficiency. Akin, positive coefficients of age, livestock holding and plots distance were found to increase households' technical inefficiency. Hence, emphasis should be given to improve the efficiency level of those less efficient households by adopting the practices of relatively efficient households in the study area. Beside this, policies and strategies of the government should be directed towards the above mentioned determinants.

Keywords: Technical efficiency, Stochastic frontier production, Smallholders, Konso, Sorghum Production.

INTRODUCTION

Background of the Study

Ethiopia, the country with an area of about 1,120,000 square kilometres, is one of the most populous countries in Africa with the population of 84.32 million in 2012 with annual growth rate of 2.6% (CSA, 2013). In 2015 this population size has reached 90.08 million as projected by the Central Statistical Agency (CSA, 2015) based on the 2013 Inter-Censal Population Survey (ICPS). This growing population requires better economic performance than ever before at least to ensure food security. However, the agricultural sector in the country is largely small-scale, subsistence oriented and heavily dependent on rainfall, which is highly variable spatially and temporally. It is a dominant sector in Ethiopia and is accounting for about 45% of GDP and 80% for export commodity. About 85% of Ethiopians livelihood depends on agriculture (MoFEC, 2012).
