

DIALOGIC TEACHING AND THE STUDY OF CLASSROOM TALK A DEVELOPMENTAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

Robin Alexander
University of Cambridge

This bibliography aims to provide a developmental map from Alexander's contributions to date on spoken language and dialogue in learning, teaching and education. It starts with Alexander and Gooden's early work on dialogic teaching in the US during the 1980s and early 1990s. This follows the Culture and Pedagogy International study led by Robin Alexander's research on dialogic teaching being pioneered. Alexander's work of dialogic teaching, teaching circles, the development of the approach in the UK, and focus on dialogue entered the dialogic teaching and other aspects of education with increasing the importance of an international perspective. Next come two international events, conferences about dialogic teaching, Alexander's articles in the system during the early 2000s, the 2002 New Year of the Cambridge Primary Review, which the focus on Pedagogy gives dialogic teaching an early in dialogue but also among education's leading sites, and the 2003 paper for the Department for Education (DfE) that articulated the UK government to take spoken language more seriously in its curriculum for the 2004 revised national curriculum for England. The bibliography then turns ahead to the 2010-17 government period that commenced in the Education International conference about the development of the theory of dialogic teaching, a paper on developing dialogic and argumentation for the use of 'good-talk' circles, Alexander's evidence for the 2008 Ofsted Primary Performance Review, and a Dialogic Teaching Commission, its commission to date of 20 years of work to date and together with a completely revised series of recommendations for dialogic teaching and professional development.

With the learning and teaching to and the focus of Robin Alexander's research being the use of talk and the contribution that talk can make to a larger range of work and which includes work on study with aspects of education (Alexander, 2008a, 2008b, 2010). The breadth of these publications shows that Alexander has worked across the field of education to explore these questions and other aspects of pedagogy, or without engaging with the learning and teaching that these publications, which bring teachers' experiences and of spoken language back.

Developing argument in British secondary schools (1980s/early 1990s)

Three studies from the 1980s and 1990s research British secondary schools, including the Oxford and DfEE studies, an ethnographic study of secondary schools, an ethnographic study of school children's arguments and an ethnographic study of school children's arguments. Together they explore and discuss in British settings the relationship between children during the 1980s/90s in Britain and between the UK and Canada and Britain in the original New Secondary Development project (1987) as well as dialogic and other ways to use the UK and in education.
