Department of Oriental Printed Books and Manuscripts,Alexander George Ellis,1894 Body in Arabic Love Poetry Jokha Alharthi,2021-04-28 Jokha Alharthi re appraises the relationship between love poetry and Arab society in the 8th to 11th centuries She avoids familiar cliches about the purity of love in Udhri poetry broadly speaking an Arabic counterpart to the western medieval concept of unconsummated courtly love and instead questions the traditional much vaunted emphasis on chastity and the assumption that this poetry omits any concept of the body Alharthi focuses on the key differences between what the poetry itself says and the views of later sources about Udhri poets and their works She also documents how the representation of the beloved in the Udhri ghazal was influenced by pre Islamic poetry showing how this tradition developed with a series of overlapping historical layers And she breaks new ground by examining how this poetry treats not only the body of the beloved but also that of her lover the poet himself
