

Elaborated and restricted codes

ⓐ Restricted code:

- spoken in the family, amongst friends, in tightly knit communities
- characterised by economical use of language; doesn't spell everything out; conveys a vast amount of meaning with few words;
- used in circumstances that allow speakers to 'condense'; requires background information and prior knowledge
- unplanned discourse, context-dependent, relies on the language material and structures acquired during one's early socialization phases
- this code sets the roles of the interlocutors

ⓑ Elaborated code:

- works well where more thorough explanation is required;
- can 'stand on its own': complete and full of details
- understandable for those overhearing a conversation
- It has to be elaborate because the circumstances don't allow the speakers to condense
- planned discourse, rather context-free, draws on language material and structures acquired via literacy
- roles of interlocutors are more open
