ABSTRACT

Pushover analysis has been widely used for seismic assessment of buildings as it's a nonlinear, static technique used to estimate deformations in a structure due to seismic force. In past years pushover analysis has accomplished majority of importance because of it being simple to perform and giving effective results. The main result of a pushover analysis is the capacity curve which is a force-displacement relation, involving the load to be applied incrementally until the structure collapses. The seismic performance of the buildings can be enhanced by using various base isolation devices, such as HDRB, LRB and LDRB.

This research work aims to explore the applicability of these devices in tall buildings. To achieve this purpose storey numbers ranging from 3 to 15 with a step size of 3 storeys have been modelled and analysed with inclusion of different types of damping devices to evaluate their feasibility in this model. Finally effect of inclusion of base isolation with its effect on different storeys have been evaluated and some useful outcomes and recommendations for effective seismic design have been presented from this analysis. The structures are designed accordance with Indian Standard, i.e. IS 800:2007 and the pushover analysis has been done using structural analysis and design software STAAD pro.

Keywords: Base isolation devices, Capacity curve, Critical damping, Dislocation, Earthquake resistant structures, Hinge-FEMA, Linear elastic, Non-linear static, Pushover analysis, Seismic isolator, Storey drift.

Abbreviations: HDRB, high density rubber bearing; LRB, lead rubber bearing; LDRB, low density rubber bearing.

1. INTRODUCTION

Push-over analysis is the favoured technique for seismic presentation assessment of configuration by the main psychoanalysis strategies and system since it is accurate on the basis calculation and perception. Pushover examination permits tracing the succession of acquiescent and collapse on component and building height as well as the improvement of general competence bend of the structure. The anticipation from push-over examination is to approximate decisive comeback constraint forced on structural classification and its mechanism as secure as potential to those calculated by nonlinear vibrant examination. The information regarding the response features are provided using the pushover analysis which are not provided by elastically static examination or elastically dynamic examination.

The base isolation procedure is a seismic intend move towards in which because of the inclusion of a stretchy coating sandwiched between the groundwork and the superstructure the basic occurrence of the arrangement reduces to an importance inferior than the major force including frequencies of tremor earth movement. The isolators are not mainly acting to assimilate the vitality of the quake, however are giving an interface that responds tremor vitality over into the ground so diminishing its transmission into the structure. Additionally the capacity of damping which is provided usually by damping system helps in dispersing the power conveying while the occurrence of seismic activities. The impact
