ABSTRACT

Objective To produce European League Against Rheumatism (EULAR) recommendations for the reporting of ultrasound studies in rheumatic and musculoskeletal diseases (RMDs).

Methods Based on the literature reviews and expert opinion (through Delphi surveys), a taskforce of 23 members (12 experts in ultrasound in RMDs, 9 in methodology and biostatistics together with a patient research partner and a health professional in rheumatology) developed a checklist of items to be reported in every RMD study using ultrasound. This checklist was further refined by involving a panel of 79 external experts (musculoskeletal imaging experts, methodologists, journal editors), who evaluated its comprehensibility, feasibility and comprehensiveness. Agreement on each proposed item was assessed with an 11-point Likert scale, grading from 0 (total disagreement) to 10 (full agreement).

Results Two face-to-face meetings, as well as two Delphi rounds of voting, resulted in a final checklist of 23 items, including a glossary of terminology. Twenty-one of these were considered 'mandatory' items to be reported in every study (such as blinding, development of scoring systems, definition of target pathologies) and 2 'optional' to be reported only if applicable, such as possible confounding factors (ie, ambient conditions) or experience of the sonographers.

Conclusion An EULAR taskforce developed a checklist to ensure transparent and comprehensive reporting of aspects concerning research and procedures that need to be presented in studies using ultrasound in RMDs. This checklist, if widely adopted by authors and editors, will greatly improve the interpretability of study development and results, including the assessment of validity, generalisability and applicability.

Ultrasound is an imaging technique widely used in patients with rheumatic and musculoskeletal diseases (RMDs) to detect signs of inflammation and destructive changes.¹ Despite an increased use in clinical practice facilitated by major technical advances in the resolution of soft tissue contrast

Key messages

What is already known about this subject?

- Nomenclature, definitions of ultrasound-detected pathologies, scoring systems and technical issues may affect the validity and generalisability of results of ultrasound studies in rheumatic and musculoskeletal diseases.
- These aspects, along with critical design characteristics, are often suboptimally reported in current ultrasound studies.

What does this study add?

- A 23-item recommendation checklist was developed by a European League Against Rheumatism taskforce to ensure transparent and comprehensive reporting of ultrasound research.
- This is the first reporting checklist focused on how to report characteristics of imaging measurement tools.

How might this impact on clinical practice or future developments?

- The use of this checklist may improve the interpretability, reproducibility and generalisability of study results.

(B-mode or grey scale (GS)) and of vascular perfusion (Doppler techniques), a relatively long learning curve² and, until recently, the absence of agreed scoring systems have hampered its utilisation for research.^{1,4}

The European League Against Rheumatism (EULAR) and the Outcome Measures in Rheumatology (OMERACT) Ultrasound Working Group have actively worked towards the standardisation of the technique by developing educational programmes and by performing several studies evaluating its reliability, validity and feasibility.^{1–6} These initiatives have underlined that factors such as nomenclature, definitions of ultrasound-detected pathologies, scoring systems and technical issues
