Knell argues that national galleries should not be understood as great galleries but as peculiar sites where art is made to perform in acts of nation building. A book that fundamentally rewrites the history of these institutions and encourages the reader to dispense with elitist views of their worth. Knell reveals an unseen geography and a rich complexity of performance. He considers the ways the national galleries entangle art and nation and the differing trajectories and purposes of international and national art. Exploring galleries, artists, and artworks from around the world, National Galleries is an argument about how we think about and study these institutions. Privileging the situatedness of each national gallery performance and valuing localism over universalism, Knell looks particularly at how national art is constructed and represented. He ends with examples that show the mutability of national art and by questioning the necessity of art nationalism. Material Culture Review, 2009

Allanah, Buck, Catman, Chelsea, Michael, Pamela, and Thomas Marc Quinn, 2010. Marc Quinn has always been interested in the public's obsession with the body, its perfections and flaws, and how this obsession has led some people to alter their bodies in increasingly extreme ways. This exhibition brought together new sculptures executed in marble, bronze, and silver depicting people who have undergone extreme levels of plastic surgery and transformation, including hormone therapy, tattoos, piercing, skin bleaching, and hair dyeing, as well as implants and transplants. The people depicted included cartoon characters, minor porn stars, and celebrities. OCLC
