Contextual

When purchasing items, it is often best to purchase them from the store that offers a sale on that particular item or goods. For example, suppose you are going to purchase a new pair of jeans. The different stores offer the following percentage off on that item. In each case, the store's percentage off is indicated in parentheses next to the store's name. Determine the price you will pay for the jeans at each store. For each store, write a percent equation to solve for the missing percentage.

Store A: Original price is $40. Store B: Original price is $40. Store C: Original price is $40.

Store D: Original price is $40. Store E: Original price is $40. Store F: Original price is $40.

Store G: Original price is $40. Store H: Original price is $40. Store I: Original price is $40.

Store J: Original price is $40. Store K: Original price is $40. Store L: Original price is $40.

Store M: Original price is $40. Store N: Original price is $40. Store O: Original price is $40.

As the discounts offered to each customer change, it may seem like each store's original price for the jeans is different. How does your percentage change when the original price for the jeans increases instead of stays the same? Try these activities.

1. Write down the original price of an item and the price of the item with a discount. For example, if the original price is $40 and the discount is $10, the price of the item with a discount is $30.
2. Write down the original price of an item and the price of the item with a discount. For example, if the original price is $40 and the discount is $10, the price of the item with a discount is $30.
