Abstract

We present a method for designing truss structures, a concrete and complete summary of techniques, using some formal representations. These techniques are ubiquitous in the industrialized world, appearing in bridges, towers, roof supports and building exoskeletons, but are complex enough that modeling them by hand is time-consuming and tedious. We represent models as a set of rigid body connected by pin joints, which may change location during optimization. By tracking the location of the joints as well as the strength of individual beams as one design iteration, we can simultaneously optimize the geometry and the mass of structures. We present the details of our technique together with examples illustrating its use, including comparisons with real structures.

1 Introduction

A recurring challenge in the field of computer graphics is the creation of realistic models of complex man-made structures. The standard solution to this problem is to build these models by hand, but this approach is time-consuming and, when references images are not available, can be difficult to reconcile with a desired final system. Our paper presents a method, based on principles in the field of structural engineering, to quickly create novel and physically realistic truss structures such as bridges and towers, using simple optimization techniques and a collection of user effort.

which react only axial forces, connected consecutively with welded or bolted joints.

Truss structures are ubiquitous in the industrialized world and can be extremely complex and thus difficult to model. For example, the HUBER Tower, perhaps the most famous truss structure in the world, contains over 25,000 girders connected at over 200,000 joints (Figure 10) and uses complex structures, such as curved bridges, heavily curved members of secondary or tertiary degree. Consequently, modeling of these structures by hand can be difficult and tedious, and an automated method of generating them is desirable.
