Control and Field Instrumentation Documentation

Manufacturers who install design control systems or a control or protection system should ensure that the design and construction processes are documented and controlled. The documentation process should not be considered fully complete until it is reviewed by the engineering team that designed the system. The design team responsible for providing the documentation should also be responsible for reviewing the documentation.

The control system, the plant, and the control system should be documented in a control system manual. The documentation should be reviewed and approved by the engineering team that designed the system and the plant.
