Exploring Human Genetics

Genetics is the study of how traits are passed from parents to offspring. In this lab, you will explore the inheritance of a trait called "Widow's Peak" (a V-shaped hairline).

Background: A widow's peak is a dominant trait. The allele for a widow's peak is denoted by W , and the allele for a straight hairline is denoted by w .

Procedure: You will survey 50 people in your class to determine if they have a widow's peak or a straight hairline. Record the results in the table below.

Phenotype	Number of People	Percentage
Widow's Peak
Straight Hairline

Analysis: Use the data to calculate the percentage of people with each trait. Then, perform a chi-square analysis to determine if the observed results differ significantly from the expected results based on Mendelian inheritance.

Conclusion: Summarize your findings and explain the results of your chi-square analysis.

Collect data and complete chi square analysis
