In real-life group decision-making environment, different decision-makers (DMs) might be hesitant to provide their evaluation by more than two linguistic terms with positive, neutral, negative, and refusal information (e.g., attitude for support, neutral, oppose, and refusal) for criteria of alternative. In order to solve such kinds of decision-making problems, a novel definition of hesitant picture fuzzy linguistic sets (HPFLSs) is introduced, and the HPFLS-based methods are developed. Considering the operation laws appeared in previous papers are not well suitable for HPFLS operation, the novel operation laws of HPFLSs are developed. Then, two aggregation operators of HPFLSs are developed, including hesitant picture fuzzy linguistic weighted average operator (HPFLSWA) and hesitant picture fuzzy linguistic weighted geometric operator (HPFLSGG). Meanwhile, the related proofs are given in detail. Additionally, the comparison method of score and accuracy functions is provided to rank the alternative. Finally, a real-life case of teaching performance evaluation is used to verify the proposed methods. The same case-based comparisons are further conducted between the proposed method and previous methods. The results showed that the proposed method can well overcome the lack of operation rules appeared in previous multicriteria group decision-making (MCGDM) methods and demonstrate effectiveness.

1. Introduction

In recent years, as one of the useful tools to solve MCGDM problems, the fuzzy linguistic set-based methods [1] have been a focus of research. Along with more and more complex decision-making environment, many scholars proposed different extensions of fuzzy linguistic term sets. In order to avoid the information loss for computing with words, Herrera and Martínez [2] put forward a 2-tuple fuzzy linguistic representation model. Then, some different 2-tuple fuzzy linguistic sets-based approaches are proposed to handle different decision-making problems [3–5]. Focusing on aggregating the criteria information, Wei [6] used 2-tuple linguistic information-based generalized weighted average and geometric operators, Wan [7] developed the 2-tuple linguistic hybrid aggregation operator, and Liu et al. [8] developed 2-tuple linguistic Heronian mean operators; these methods enormously enriched the decision-making theory. However, in some decision circumstances, interval number can better express the uncertainty of decision-maker information. Thus, uncertain linguistic set-based approaches [9–12] were proposed. Subsequently, to extend the 2-tuple fuzzy set with uncertain linguistic set, Zhang [13] defined several interval-valued 2-tuple linguistic aggregation operators, and Liu et al. [14] defined some new operation rules for 2-tuple linguistic term set and developed Bonferroni mean operators. All of the above approaches were illustrated by the practical application cases, and their effectiveness was demonstrated.

However, in some cases, the membership degree cannot be defined by one specific value; thus, Wang and Li [15] proposed intuitionistic fuzzy linguistic set. Then, intuitionistic fuzzy linguistic set-based approaches [16–19] were proposed. Due to the different demands of practical
