Green Economics Molly Scott Cato, 2012-05-16
The world as we know it needs a new economics. Climate change, financial crisis, and out of control globalization—all the major problems facing the world—have their roots in the dominant economic system. The globalised marketplace is the prevailing force in our lives, undermining the real importance of our human communities and our planet. Green Economics argues that society should be embedded within the ecosystem and that markets and economies are social structures that should respond to social and environmental priorities. This highly readable text provides an introduction to green economics, including views on taxation, welfare, money, economic development, and employment through the work of its inspirational figures, including Schumacher, Robertson, and Douthwaite. It also explores the contributions and insights of schools of thought critical of the dominant neo-classical economic paradigm, including ecofeminism, views from the global South, and the perspective of indigenous peoples. Examples of effective green policies that are already being implemented across the world are presented, as well as policy prescriptions for issues including climate change, localization, citizens' income, economic measurement, ecotaxes, and trade.

The Measurement of Environmental and Resource Values A. Myrick Freeman, 2003
Non-market valuation is becoming increasingly accepted as an evaluative tool of economics related to environmental and resource protection. Freeman's economics at Bowdoin College presents an overview of the literature, introducing the principal methods and techniques of resource valuation. Chapters cover the measurement of welfare changes, revealed and stated preference models, non-use models, aggregation of values across time, environmental quality as a factor input, longevity and health valuation, property value models, hedonic wage models, and recreational uses of natural resource systems.

Valuation and the Environment Martin O'Connor, Clive L. Spash, 1999
This major new book presents recent advances in the theory and practice of environmental valuation and resource management. Leading experts in the field present methodological and empirical evidence for applying valuation methods to ecological policy problems. The methodological contributions examine such themes as uncertainty, distributional conflict, positional analysis, weak comparability, and the need for collective solutions to environmental problems. Case studies are incorporated to support these theoretical reflections. A number of empirical studies are used to demonstrate and evaluate valuation practices in a variety of institutional and policy settings. These range from international environmental issues such as climate change and transboundary atmospheric pollution to species preservation and coastal ecosystem protection. The contributors conclude that effective approaches for the evaluation of environmental risks, degradation, and benefits must be specifically designed as functions of institutional, social, and ecological factors. Valuation and the Environment will be essential reading for students and scholars of environmental and ecological economics, environmental management and regulation, resource management, and public policy.
