Abstract. In this paper, we show how using data mining algorithms can help discovering pedagogically relevant knowledge contained in databases obtained from Web-based educational systems. These findings can be used both to help teachers with managing their class, understand their students' learning and reflect on their teaching and to support learner reflection and provide proactive feedback to learners.

1 Introduction

Web-based educational systems collect large amounts of student data, from web logs to much more semantically rich data contained in student models. Whilst a large focus of AIED research is to provide adaptation to a learner using the data stored in his/her student model, we explore ways to mining data in a more collective way: just as a human teacher can adapt to an individual student, the same teacher can also learn more about how students learn, reflect and improve his/her practice by studying a group of students.

The field of Data Mining is concerned with finding new patterns in large amounts of data. Widely used in Business, it has scarce applications to Education. Of course, Data Mining can be applied to the business of education, for example to find out which alumni are likely to make larger donations. Here we are interested in mining student models in a pedagogical perspective. The goal of our project is to define how to make data possible to mine, to identify which data mining techniques are useful and understand how to discover and present patterns that are pedagogically interesting both for learners and teachers.

The process of tracking and mining such student data in order to enhance teaching and learning is relatively recent but there are already a number of studies trying to do so and researchers are starting to merge their ideas [1]. The usefulness of mining such data is promising but still needs to be proven and stereotypical analysis to be streamlined. Some researchers already try and set up some guidelines for ensuring that ITS data can be usefully minable [2] out of their experience of mining data in the project LISTEN [3].

Some directions start to emerge. Simple statistics, queries or visualisation algorithms are useful to give to teachers/tutors an overall view of how a class is doing. For example, the authors in [4] use pedagogical scenarios to control interactive learning objects. Records are used to build charts that show exactly where each student is in the learning sequence, thus offering to the tutor distant monitoring. Similarly in [5], students' answers to exercises are recorded. Simple queries allow to show charts to teachers/tutors of all students with the exercises they have attempted, they have successfully solved, making tutors aware of how students progress through the course. More sophisticated information visualisation techniques are used in [6] to externalise student data and generate pictorial representations for course instructors to explore. Using features extracted from log data and marks obtained in the final exam, some researchers use classification techniques to predict student performance fairly accurately [7]. These allow tutors to identify students at risk and provide advice ahead of the final exam. When student mistakes are recorded, association rules algorithms can be used to find mistakes often associated together [8]. Combined with a genetic algorithm, concepts mastered together can be identified using student scores[9].
