

What is metaphysical poetry?

- The term “metaphysical” was first used derogatively by John Dryden to describe John Donne’s work. Dryden’s accusation was aimed at Donne’s references to science and philosophy (a great departure from sing-song, “lovey-dovey” poetry), and his “unnatural” engagement with intellectual ideas.
- Ben Johnson too employed the term ‘metaphysical poets’, apparently having Donne, Cleveland, and Cowley chiefly in mind. He remarks of them that their poems yoked ‘the most heterogeneous ideas...by violence together’.
