B. The critical control points (CCPs) in the process-flow chart have been identified as steps that are crucial to ensuring food safety. Each CCP is a step in the process where control can be applied to prevent, eliminate, or reduce a food safety hazard to an acceptable level. Therefore, each step identified as a critical control point is explained below:

STEP 1: Receiving ingredients (CCP)

Type of hazard: Microbial hazard

Justification: This step is critical because it involves checking the quality and safety of incoming ingredients. It ensures that only safe and suitable ingredients are used in the production process. For instance, no preventive control measure for microbiology on salmonella count along the process flow chart as such the need to identify as CCP to eliminate or reduce the likely occurrence of the hazard to an acceptable level by reviewing the certificate of analysis of all raw materials at the point of reception.

STEP 10: Labelling and wrapping (CCP)

Type of hazard: Allergen (milk and gluten)

Justification: This step is critical because it ensures that the product is properly labelled with accurate information, including allergen declarations and storage instructions, which are important for consumer safety. For instance, no preventive control measure of allergen after this process step as such the need to eliminate or reduce the likely occurrence of the hazard to an acceptable level through visual inspection and proper wrapping integrity.

STEP 11: Metal detection (CCP)

Type of hazard: Physical (metal piece, dust particles, bone chips, glass)

Justification: Metal detection is crucial to identify and remove any metal contaminants that may have inadvertently entered the pizza during the production process. This step helps to prevent physical hazards. For instance, no preventive control measure of foreign object in place after this process step thus the need to eliminate or reduce the occurrence by installing a metal detector to prevent the possible escape of a metal piece.
