

Chapter 1 Section 2 Notes

The scientific process is a systematic way of gathering information to answer questions. It involves making observations, asking questions, forming hypotheses, testing hypotheses, and drawing conclusions. The scientific process is a cycle that repeats itself over and over again.

Primary and Secondary Sources

Information can come from two sources: primary sources and secondary sources. Primary sources are original information that is collected directly from the source.

They are written or recorded by the people who lived at a particular moment in time. Primary sources can be written, audio, video, or photographs. They provide a direct record of events and experiences.

Secondary sources are information that has been gathered from primary sources. They are often written by someone who was not present at the event. Secondary sources can be books, articles, or documentaries.

Secondary sources are useful for understanding events that happened long ago or in places that are difficult to visit. They provide a different perspective on the same event.

Secondary sources can be used to compare and contrast different accounts of the same event. They can also be used to identify biases and limitations in the information.

Primary Sources

Primary sources are original information that is collected directly from the source. They can be written, audio, video, or photographs. They provide a direct record of events and experiences.

Secondary Sources

Secondary sources are information that has been gathered from primary sources.
