Properties of Matter

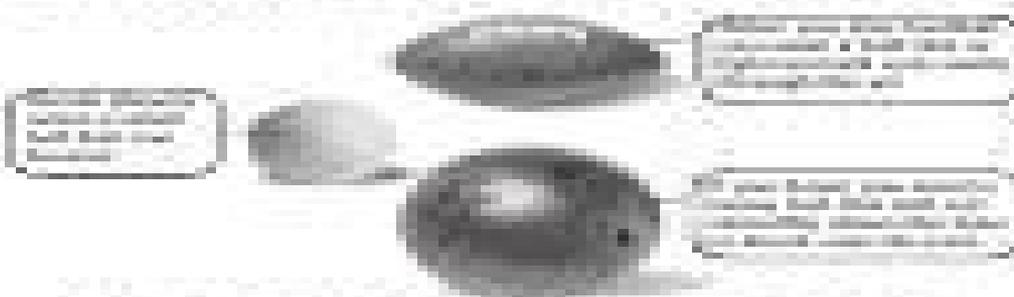

Introduction

Are you able to distinguish between two substances by touch?

- Why are cooking, clothes, and furniture grouped together?
- Why are diamonds, rubies and sapphires grouped together?

What Are Physical Properties?

Start with the bottle on the right below as shown in a well-lit room. Describe the colour of each of the substances.

If physical properties of substances can be observed without changing the identity of the substance, then these are called physical properties. For example, you can identify an object as red, white, blue, yellow, etc. by touch. In general, the properties of an object are determined by the particles of the substance. The colour depends on λ .

Many of the physical properties of substances depend on the arrangement of particles (or molecules). These properties include density, hardness, malleability, and the ability to conduct heat and electricity.

Some physical properties depend on how much of a material you have. In other words, a large amount of a material may have different properties from a smaller amount of the material. Other physical properties do not depend on how much of the substance you have. They show that no matter how large or small a sample of material is, the particular property is always the same.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

By the end of this chapter, you should be able to:

- 1. distinguish between physical and chemical changes.
- 2. describe the physical properties of substances.
