Exploring Human Genetics

Genetics is the study of how traits are passed from parents to offspring. In this lab, you will explore the inheritance of a trait called "tongue rolling" (the ability to curl your tongue into a U-shape).

Background: Tongue rolling is a dominant trait. If you have at least one dominant allele (R), you can roll your tongue. If you have two recessive alleles (r), you cannot roll your tongue.

Procedure: You will survey a group of people to determine if they can roll their tongues. Record the results in the table below.

Analysis: Use the data from your survey to calculate the expected and observed frequencies of the trait. Perform a chi-square analysis to determine if the observed results are significantly different from the expected results.

Conclusion: Write a short paragraph summarizing your findings and what you have learned about the inheritance of tongue rolling.
