Exploring Affective Language with Electronic Text Analysis Tools Mattia Bilardello, 2016-04-21 The manuscript poems of Sir Thomas Wyatt 1503 1542 supply the materials for a case study in the language of the emotions in the Tudor period of Early Modern English Courtesan and ambassador for his king at a most critical time in Europe Thomas Wyatt was also the cultivated and enterprising reader and translator of poetry from the Continent who brought new inspiration and new forms to the English tradition It is with a special focus on the means of expression of the emotions that this work approaches Wyatt's compositions and explores a language and a body of poetry that not only set the standards for courtly conventions but is a paragon of dramatic intensity that can in turn be overtly erotic and perhaps secretly political and that in its ultimate elusiveness has both whetted and defeated the curiosity of Wyatt's biographers Text analysis software has made it possible to create a comprehensive dictionary from individual word occurrences in the poems and generate a map of words that name or relate to the emotions The use of an electronic text especially set up for the analysis has also made it possible to examine the poetry in cross section extrapolating patterns of use for the language of the emotions across the manuscript and leading to a core of four emotion states that are the cornerstones of Wyatt's dramatic self representation
