Ideas to Know:

- The states of matter are solids, liquids, and gases.
- Physical change is when the way matter looks is changed, but it does not become a new kind of matter.
- Some examples of physical changes include:
cutting or folding paper, making something out of Play-doh, cutting up food, folding clothes
- Chemical change is when one kind of matter changes into a different kind of matter.
- Some examples of chemical changes include:
baking bread, rust forming, burning paper or wood, soaps used to clean, batteries releasing electricity, burning gasoline in cars
- Matter can change from one state to another (from a solid to a liquid to a gas), but this is NOT a chemical change. For example, ice melting to a liquid is a physical change because NO new matter is formed.
- A mixture is made of 2 or more kinds of matter that are placed together. Example: tossed salad, fruit salad
- The types of matter in a mixture do not change into another substance. Each kind of matter can be separated from the other kinds of matter in the mix.
- A solution is when a substance dissolves into another substance.
- A saltwater mixture can be separated by boiling the water. The boiling water evaporates into the air to become water vapor (a gas), and the salt is left behind.
